“The world could end tomorrow, but at the Waldhaus, you’d probably only hear about it a week later, when a porter calmly informs you.” Martin Mosebach

An Alpine Waltz: End of piste Serenity awaits

SPRING SKIING AND LUXURIOUS TRANQUILITY IN THE HEART OF ENGADIN

Springtime skiing in the Upper Engadin possesses a distinct allure. The sun lingers overhead, casting warm, golden light on the untouched slopes of Corviglia and Corvatsch. Mornings greet you with firm, fast snow; afternoons wrap you in a gentle warmth as you glide through softening trails beneath the watchful gaze of St. Moritz's towering peaks. It's a season defined by contrast: mountain energy and valley serenity.

And as the day's adventures leave you content and gently weary, with a heart full and sun-kissed cheeks, you descend into another realm: Hotel Waldhaus. Set amidst serene larch forests above Sils-Maria, this is more than a resting place—it's a warm embrace. It's not just where you end your day on the slopes; it's where your story deepens.

Waldhaus is a retreat of alpine grace and heritage. Here, days end not in bustle or noise, but in thoughtful conversation, candlelit corners, and a refined calm that's increasingly rare. As Martin Mosebach once quipped, „The world might end tomorrow, but at the Waldhaus, you'd likely only hear of it a week later—from a porter's quiet mention.“

First light traces gentle arcs across the slopes above Sils—each turn a quiet dialogue with the mountain air.

The tower of Hotel Waldhaus stands tall amid the alpine stillness, a welcoming symbol of timeless elegance.

A HERITAGE ROOTED IN FAMILY TRADITION

Since its inception in 1908, Waldhaus has remained in the hands of a single family—one that has graciously welcomed great minds from art, philosophy, and science. Notable guests such as Donna Leon, Gerhard Richter, David Bowie, Theodor Adorno, Albert Einstein, and Thomas Mann have wandered its halls. Today, brothers Claudio and Patrick Dietrich uphold the legacy, blending hospitality with a personal warmth that turns a stay into something more intimate.

Every gesture—whether a greeting at the desk or a farewell upon departure—embodies their belief: that genuine kindness transforms even brief encounters into cherished memories.

Patrick Dietrich: „In my opinion the epicenter of hospitality at the Waldhaus is that the people at the Waldhaus like what they are doing and they like people.“

Claudio and Patrick Dietrich continue a family tradition with heartfelt grace—greeting guests like returning friends.

A STORYBOOK CASTLE IN THE TREES

Tucked within a forest of stately larches, Hotel Waldhaus appears like a vision from folklore. Its commanding tower and battlements hint at a storied history and a future grounded in tradition. With Lake Silvaplana, Lake Sils, the expansive Sils plain, and the picturesque Fex Valley as its backdrop, the hotel's silhouette evokes both the elegance of a past era and the timelessness of a true haven.

ARCHITECTURE THAT TELLS A STORY

A stroll through Hotel Waldhaus is a walk through history. Its design balances panoramic views with architectural grace, where Belle Époque splendor is paired with understated modern updates. Marble staircases curve through light-filled halls, dark wood panels shine with renewed life, and vintage chandeliers sparkle beside quiet innovations.

Each space, each room holds a whisper of the past and a nod to the present. Whether it's the synchronized magenta clock system or the carefully selected artwork adorning the walls, every detail reflects a thoughtful elegance.

Dining at Waldhaus is just as varied. Choose between the grandeur of the main dining room, a quieter meal in the cozy à la carte restaurant, or savor reimagined classics in the light-filled modern pavilion.

A restored Belle Époque staircase sweeps upward, seamlessly blending heritage with contemporary ease.

Each dish is a love letter to the region—crafted with care, plated with precision, and rooted in local flavor.

Gliding under a vast Engadin sky, every curve becomes a joyful tribute to spring's gentle return.

A TASTE OF THE ALPS

Culinary craft at Waldhaus draws deeply from the region's traditions. Under Executive Chef Gero Porstein and Pastry Chef Renato Pellegrinelli, dishes become expressions of place and season. Each plate highlights the finest local fare—herbs picked from alpine meadows, meat from nearby farms, potatoes grown in mountain soil—offering guests a rich blend of tradition and creativity.

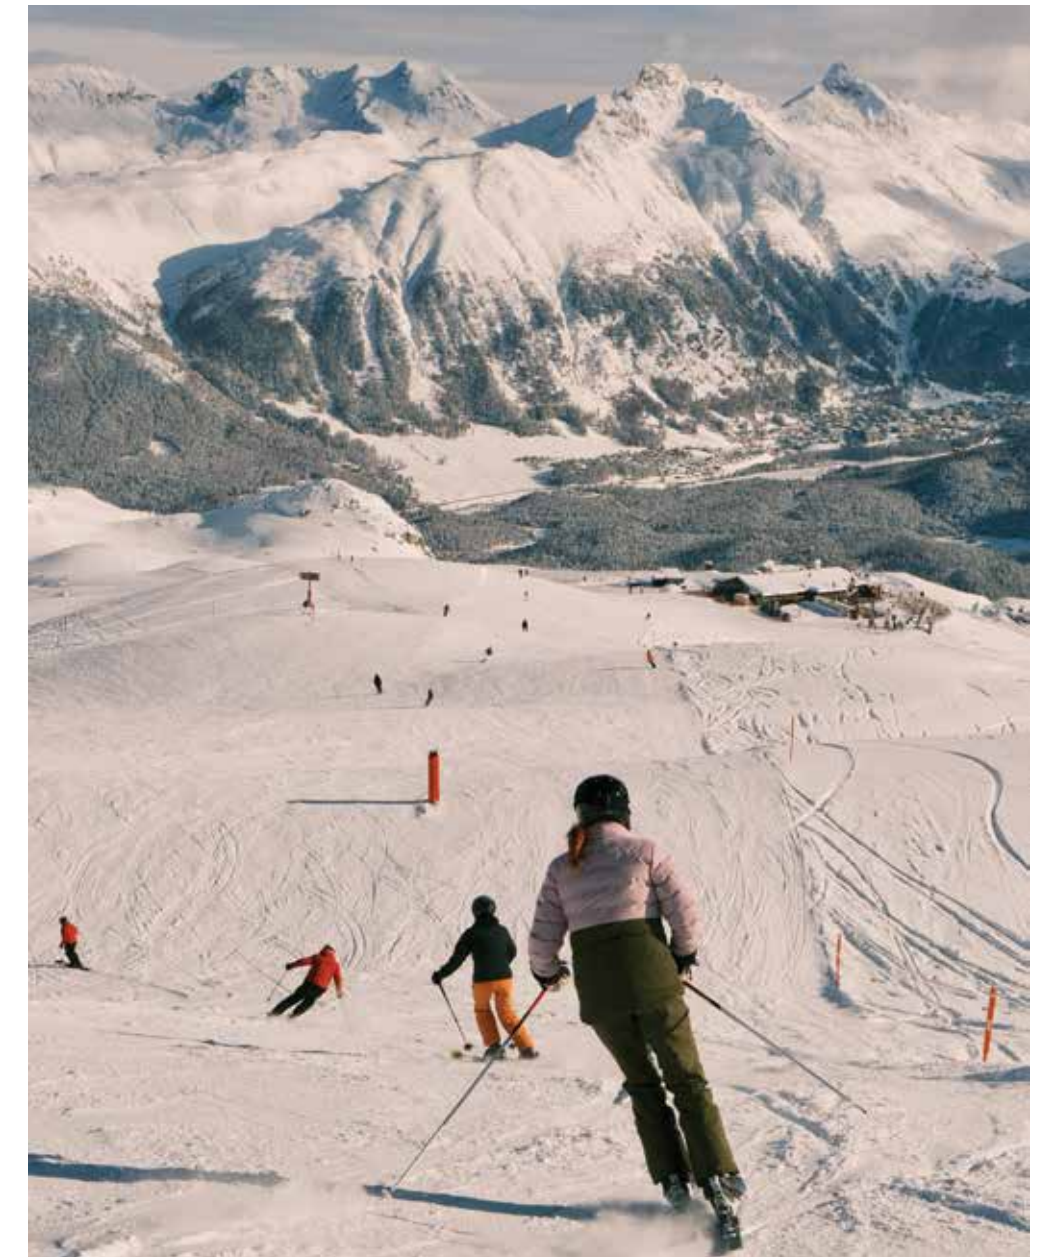

WELLNESS NESTLED IN NATURE

Guests seeking renewal will find solace in the Waldhaus spa. Designed by acclaimed Basel architects Miller & Maranta, the wellness area is carved into the mountain itself. Skylights bathe the rooms in natural light, while mosaic tiles glimmer with a calm clarity. Treatments, created using Team Dr. Joseph products, blend natural purity with scientific precision. Whether taking laps in the 20-meter pool, indulging in one of seven distinct therapy rooms, or simply unwinding in the tranquil atmosphere, the spa is a retreat within the retreat.

Bathed in soft sunlight, the spa pool offers a quiet space for pause—an extension of the Waldhaus's peaceful soul.

From the rooftops, winter clings in silence while spring teases the horizon with subtle warmth.

AN EXPERIENCE FOR ALL AGES

Beyond fine food and curated art, Waldhaus caters to every guest—young and old. Families are welcomed with programs for children and teens, offering outdoor adventures and creative indoor workshops. Whether carving paths on snowy slopes, discovering stories in the library, or chatting with beloved long-time staff, guests of all ages can create their own Waldhaus narrative.

ECHOES OF THE PAST, COMFORTS OF THE PRESENT

From its extensive wine cellar—home to 30,000 bottles of regional treasures—to fireside guest readings in the historic lounge, Hotel Waldhaus embodies hospitality rooted in grace and substance. This is not merely a luxurious stay; it is an immersion into thoughtful living.

Every corner, from grand salons to the quiet of a restored guest room, adds a chapter to the Waldhaus story. Its luxury lies not in extravagance, but in authenticity—in moments that stay with you.

Hotel Waldhaus is more than a destination. It is a living narrative, woven with care, history, and artistry. It invites guests not just to visit, but to belong, if only for a while. In every heartfelt detail, it reminds us: true luxury lies in being seen, welcomed, and remembered.

A tranquil alcove within the hotel invites stillness—where thoughtful art and ambient light stir reflection.

A candid moment unfolds in the historic library, where generations meet over books, stories, and shared laughter.
